Katrine works as a consultant at Mobilize Strategy Consulting AS with a primary focus on the university and health care sector as well as higher educational institutions in Norway and Denmark. Through 2007-2017 she worked as an internal consultant at the Norwegian Institute of Public Health in Oslo with a main responsibility of further education, teaching, guidance, and coaching of professionals. She is a veterinary with a doctorate, and she completed a Marie Curie post doc in the Netherlands. Her academic career is built from interdisciplinary and international environments where public utility and the practical application of research results are central.

Katrine is interested in the process toward the goal – how to support organizations and individuals in finding and utilizing their full potential. She creates trust through dialogue and understanding and has the ability to motivate and see situations and issues from a holistic perspective. She has been a gestalt therapist with her own practice since 2013 and her core competence is relational work.

As a teacher and mentor, Katrine has broad experience with facilitating groups of different nationality, professional starting points, and cultural backgrounds. She is a skilled pedagogical intermediary with a passion for communication, both written and oral. Her primary competences are; scientific guidance, interdisciplinary coordination, process and change management, relational leadership, public health preparedness and crisis management, as well as international multicultural collaboration.
